Then the carnival of the wounded begins. Men find their voices. Flowers are hurled like confetti. Amid cheers and blossoms the wounded receive their welcome.

There is no mistaking about the response. Men prone on stretchers try to wave their hands; officers propped up on cursions came rigidly to the salute; others, helpless, smile their gratitude.

It is hard for Londoners to welcome their wounded. They know little of emotional display. But, crowded in thousands on the roadway, clambering on long lines of stopped omnibuses, they manage to express to their sufferers a heartfelt appreciation.
